ASHLAND, Ore. -- Ashland Community Health Foundation announced $25,750 in scholarships for students at Rogue Community College. These scholarships aim to ease the financial burden of tuition for students pursuing careers in the allied and emergency health fields.

Ten medical students received scholarships at RCC, ranging from $1,250 to $4,000 per student. The selected students include seven students from the medical assistant program, two students pursuing paramedicine and one student aiming to be a pharmacy technician.

“The generous award will assist in the pursuit of my paramedic degree and will help my fire district have an additional advanced level provider,” said Brock Booth, one of the scholarship recipients.

ACHF said the investment is in both the individual dreams of the students as well as the future of health care in the region.
